ABSTRACT

This survey analyzes the characteristics of students who dropped all of their classes at City College of San Francisco (CCSF) before the college's census date. The survey finds that students who drop all of their classes are similar to students who remain enrolled, yet tend to be older, to hold a college-level degree, and to hold at least one full-time job. The major reasons given for dropping classes were: (1) work schedule conflict; (2) transferred; (3) temporary break from studies; (4) accepted a job; (5) home responsibilities; (6) courses not offered; (7) coursework took too much time; and (8) illness. Students were also asked to rate 40 college services, including food, job placement assistance, and building conditions. Students also rated instruction--including class scheduling, quality of instruction, content of classes, and class size. The majority of students expressed overall satisfaction with CCSF. Most (85%) would recommend the college to a friend, and more than 75% plan to attend in the future. Many negative written comments pertained to the conditions of buildings, classrooms, and classroom equipment. This document includes all survey questions and their mean scores. The respondents analyzed did not include first-time students, who tend to differ notably from the overall sample population. (Contains a sample survey and tables.) (NB)

Students Leaving Before Census
Spring 2000

In Spring 2000, 2337 students enrolled in courses at CCSF and subsequently dropped all their enrollments prior to the college's census date. Surveys were mailed to approximately 1500 of these students. Overall, 294 survey responses were available for statistical analysis. The report which follows contains descriptions of the students who were surveyed, the students who responded and a text-based overview of the survey responses. Following the report, pages of tables contain all the numeric survey responses. Finally, an appendix contains additional information on the survey process.

In brief, the report shows that students who drop all their courses tend to be older than other CCSF students, hold a college-level degree, be enrolled with a career focus, and hold at least one full-time job. Forty one percent of the students who responded to the survey indicated they left CCSF at this time for academic reasons; 33% for employment-related reasons, 32% for personal reasons, and only 9% for financial reasons. The majority of students expressed overall satisfaction with City College and most would recommend CCSF to a friend. Over three-quarters of respondents plan to attend CCSF in the future.

WHO WAS SURVEYED?

The appendix contains demographic comparisons of (1) students who drop all their classes vs. the enrolled student population and (2) students responding to the survey vs. the total cohort of these students who dropped all their courses. These assessments were used to determine the response rate and evaluate possible response biases.

Students who drop all their courses look a lot like students who remain enrolled. However, students who drop are somewhat more likely to be older, hold a college-level degree, be enrolled with a career focus, and hold at least one full-time job. To slightly less effect, students who drop all their courses are also more likely to be female or Asian/Pacific Islander, less likely to be Latino. (Appendix 1)

The response rate for the survey (21%) fell well within range of typical response rates for a mail survey (Appendix 2). The results can be assumed to represent the views of the majority of students who drop all their courses. Due to the small number and limited responses from first time students, the results do not represent first time students who comprise only 7% of the total cohort and 2% of respondents (Appendix 3). For more information, see the appendix.

WHY DID THESE STUDENTS DROP THEIR CLASSES?

Student respondents indicated the following as major reasons for leaving CCSF at this time: academic (41%), employment-related (33%) and personal (32%). Only 9% of respondents expressly indicated financial reasons for leaving (see p. 5). (Multiple responses allowed.) More specifically, the following areas were cited as major reasons for leaving:

- Work schedule conflict (27.2%)
- Transferred (12.2%)
- Temporary break from studies (11.9%)
- Accepted a job (11.9%)
- Home responsibilities (9.5%)
- Courses not offered (9.2%)
- Coursework too much time (8.5%)
- Illness (personal or family) (7.8%)

Less than 6% indicated dissatisfaction with instruction as a major reason for leaving CCSF. The number of students who drop their classes due to transfer may be the most surprising finding of this survey. Of the 294 respondents, at least 17% (51) were in the process of transferring. (See responses to question 10 on page 8.)

HOW DO THESE STUDENTS RATE THE COLLEGE AND COLLEGE SERVICES?

The majority of students responding expressed overall satisfaction with City College. Most (85.4%) would recommend CCSF to a friend. Over three-quarter of respondents plan to attend CCSF in the future. Overall, respondents indicated comfortable interactions with other students, faculty and staff. More than half of respondents felt a "sense of belonging" at the campus they attended.

More specifically, respondents rated forty different college services on a scale from 1 to 4. (For the purposes of this report, responses were scaled such that 4.000 = "Excellent." See pp. 6-7 for specific ratings.) No services received consistent "Excellent" ratings. Students rated most services as either "Good" (Mean Response in the 3.000 range) or "Good to Fair" (Mean Response in the 2.500 range). Parking received the lowest rating-- a solid "Fair" (Mean Response close to 2.000). Food Services, Job placement assistance, and Classroom and classroom equipment were also among the lowest rated services. (For more information related to employment see pp.8-9.) Notably, many negative written comments pertained to the conditions of buildings, classrooms, and classroom equipment. Conversely, praise for the Library may be largely related to this same issue of quality of surroundings. (Future surveys emphasize that we seek information on library services.)

Asked to indicate their satisfaction with instruction, students rated the Availability of Courses, Convenience of Class Scheduling, and Class Size between "Good" and "Fair." Quality of Instruction and Content of Courses were rated "Good." For more precise survey results, see the survey responses which follow on the next seven pages.

ADDITIONAL STUDENT SURVEYS:

- An update of this survey report— Students Leaving Before Census— will be done in Spring 2002.
- Students petitioning for degrees, awards or certificates were surveyed beginning Fall 2000. Preliminary results are currently available; results for the 00/01 school year will be available at the start of the Fall 2001 term.
- A survey of Noncredit students is planned for Spring 2001.
- Entering credit students will be surveyed in Fall 2001.
- Continuing credit students will be surveyed in Fall 2002.

CHARACTERISTICS OF STUDENTS WHO DROPPED ALL THEIR COURSES

Students who dropped all their courses in Spring 2000 were categorized by the following:

1. Student Type (continuing, new, etc.)
2. Ethnicity
3. Gender
4. Age
5. Educational Level (at the time of application)
6. Educational Goal
7. Number of Hours Expected to Work
8. Department(s) of Enrollment(s).

(Zip code was reviewed and deemed too diverse to make any meaningful judgments.) In all eight categories, students who drop all their courses follow the general distribution of enrollment at the college. Significant differences which do exist are not sufficient to alter the general assertion that students who drop all their courses look a lot like students who remain enrolled.

However, students who drop are somewhat more likely to be older, hold a college-level degree, be enrolled with a career focus, and are employed full time. To slightly less effect, students who drop all their courses are also more likely to be female or Asian/Pacific Islander, less likely to be Latino. Table 1 below shows the percentages for these characteristics; more complete information is presented in the preceding two pages.

TABLE 1

	Students Dropping All Courses	Enrolled Population	Numeric Difference from Expected*
Continuing from prior semester	61%	64%	-63
25 years old or older	77%	66%	247
Employed full time	37%	31%	145
Degreed (Associate or higher)	28%	21%	165
Career-focused ed. goal	29%	24%	134
Enrichment ed. goal	13%	11%	38
Female	58%	55%	81
Asian/PI	35%	32%	70
Latino	12%	15%	-80
Spring 2000 Total	2337	30372

*If the drop % were the same as the enroll %, how many more students there would be in the "enrolled" group.

In addition to student characteristics, course enrollment patterns were reviewed with respect to their department. In Spring 2000, nearly 23,000 pre-census drops were entered into Banner, approximately 4300 of which are attributable to the 2337 students who dropped all their courses. With one exception (Learning Assistance), these 2337 students most frequently enrolled in the 12 departments which also have the greatest overall enrollment— i.e. departments which each enroll more than 2000 students per spring term. However, the extent to which they enrolled in these 12 departments differs: there were higher initial enrollments in CIS and lower initial enrollments in Physical Education, Social Science, Mathematics, and English, among others. (Table 2 below). For example, of students dropping all their courses, 19% had enrolled in at least one CIS course. Comparatively, 15% of the total enrolled CCSF population took at least one CIS course (excluding drops).

SURVEY SAMPLE AND RESPONSE RATE

Of the 2337 students who were identified above as having dropped all their Spring 2000 course enrollments, a sample were surveyed. Surveys were sent to half of continuing students (students enrolled in the prior fall term); these students comprise over 61% of the 2337 student cohort. The remaining students who dropped all their courses were surveyed in their entirety. In all, 1498 surveys were mailed. Individuals who did not respond by the deadline were prompted by postcard. Mailings to thirty-three individuals were “returned-to-sender,” presumably because the individual had moved. Thus, the response rate for the mail survey was 21.4% (313 divided by 1465, with 11 of these discounted). The number of students who, according to end-of-term data had not maintained any of their course enrollments, was 2337; thus, the responding sample represents 13.2% of the study population (302 divided by 2337). An additional eleven respondents had course enrollments on record (presumably late adds) and were excluded from the analysis. Of the 302 respondents, some included a short note or long letter instead of responding to the entire survey. As noted earlier, overall, 294 surveys were available for statistical analysis, 302 for content analysis.

ACCOUNTING FOR SAMPLE AND RESPONSE BIAS

The overall response rate of 21.4% varied among different groups. Table 3 shows the population of students who dropped all their courses in Spring 2000 compared to the students who responded to the survey. The only sample bias—since half of continuing students were surveyed this group was under sampled—was largely corrected by the continuing students' response rate. Based on these figures, survey responses can be assumed to be a good representation of the views of continuing students, returning students and first time transfer students.

TABLE 3

	Students Dropping All Courses		Survey Respondents
	Number	%	Number	%
First Time	162	6.9%	7	2.4%
First Time Transfer	420	18.0%	60	20.4%
Returning	321	13.7%	66	22.4%
Continuing	1434	61.4%	161	54.8%
Spring 2000 Total	2337	100.0%	294	100.0%

The survey does not adequately represent the views of first time students, who comprise a small percentage of those who drop all their courses and in addition did not respond in good numbers. Views of these students can be reviewed anecdotally only with the current data.

First time students who drop all their courses differ notably from the overall sample population. First time students are younger (36% are under 25 years old), with no advanced degrees (4% hold a college degree) and less defined goals (30% undecided*), more male (48%), African American (17%) and Latino (17%). (*Note: this may also indicate lack of official college matriculation rather than a lack of internal goal orientation.)

Some other response biases are of note. (For more information see Table 4 on the following page.) Even when the response bias of student type is controlled for, African American and Latino students were less likely to respond to the survey. Combined, they represent 18% of all drops (17% after first time students are eliminated from the calculation); these students only account for 12% of survey responses. Students who are female, 40 years old and older, hold a college-level degree, or enrolled for the purpose of career or personal enrichment were somewhat more likely to respond to the survey. Essentially no difference was found in response rate for hours expected to work. Foreign Language and Art students were also more likely to respond. Where responses to survey questions vary by these characteristics, these response biases become important.
